

Vanguard Emergency Management (VEM) seeks independent contractors to conduct disaster home assessments during federally declared disaster events

Vanguard EM holds a federal contract with the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) to conduct disaster housing inspections in the aftermath of large-scale disasters such as hurricanes, tornadoes, severe storms, wildfires and earthquakes. Upon receipt of notification from FEMA, Vanguard EM deploys disaster inspectors to the declared disaster location to assess damaged homes and record damages.

What makes this opportunity unique, is the flexibility to deploy when available. By joining the Vanguard EM team, disaster inspectors can earn supplemental income while assisting affected communities and individuals recover from disastrous events.

You may register at no cost and with no previous disaster housing inspection experience. You must be able to pass the "e-QIP" background investigation and have the flexibility for deployments following a disaster. US citizenship is required.

Training is provided at no cost to all disaster inspectors. Vanguard EM has a robust training program which utilizes both an on-line learning management system (LMS) as well as in-person training. You will receive an e-mail containing your unique log-in instructions from the Vanguard EM University within 24-48 hours of completing registration. You are eligible for reimbursement of in-person training expenses as outlined in our travel policy <https://www.vanguardem.com/resources>. If you have any questions regarding the training process or log-in, please contact training@vanguardem.com.

Independent contractors for Vanguard EM are paid per inspection, receive GSA per diem during deployment, and are reimbursed for allowable field expenses.
